Recent years have seen a number of significant changes to the family justice system. These have had far reaching consequences for practitioners and families. Edward Lloyd-Jones, an experienced children and families solicitor, leads a discussion based on his recent pamphlet in which he argues that these consequences have been detrimental to the cause of children's justice. At this event Lloyd-Jones's arguments will be debated by a panel comprising a leading systems thinker, judge and social work academic.

Panel: Edward Lloyd-Jones, District Judge Crichton, Professor John Seddon, author of "Systems Thinking in the Public Sector", and Anna Gupta Senior Lecturer in social work and Children's Guardian

Sign in commences at 6:00pm with refreshments offered.
The event starts at 6:15 pm and lasts for approximately one and a half hours.
